Life Problems Facing Women in the 21st Century: Understanding Life's Experiences from a Biblical Perspective Vanita Lynn Warren

The 21st Century woman has to deal with the old challenges, while having to navigate through the new. It will help to understand why people act and or feel the way they do about their lives and the world they live in. As people learn to cope with life based upon their experiences; consequently, they are formed into the external person seen by those around them, and the internal person seen only by themselves and their Creator. From the moment a person enters the world, experience becomes their primary teacher. In order to effectively understand and support a person, a helper must understand how people respond to their life problems (negative experiences), and how the various consequences or results of those experiences are produced. Life Problems Facing Women in the 21st Century is a step in that direction.
